How To Import Keyword Research Data

By Roger Keays, 23 March 2013

When you write new content for your website it pays to know what people are actually searching for. Google Keyword Tool will give you this information, and now you can import the research you do with Google's tool you create your content.

The imported data can be used by our software to make some small automatic optimisations and is also a h reference for you when reviewing the performance of your content.

So let's get started.

1. When you create or edit some content, use the "Find Keywords" link to open Google's Keyword Tool.

Now that you have attached your valuable keyword data to your content you can choose to show the top search terms at the bottom of the page. These terms will be linked to the page which improves the keyword's relevance to search engines. Select the "Show Top Keywords" option:

☒ Show Top Keywords

And you will see the top 10 keywords added to the end of your page:

Top Search Terms: bike stores bike shops second hand bike second hand bikes bike singapore bikes singapore second hand bicycles second hand bikes for sale bike shop in singapore used bike singapore cheap second hand bikes

Please keep in mind that although targeting good keywords is an essential part of your SEO efforts, adding them on your page will only give you so much mileage in terms of rankings. For keywords with any competition, Google will rank content primarily based on:

- relevance (how well the search query matches the page content)
- page authority (quality and quantity of links to the page)

- domain authority (quantity and quality of links to the domain)
- page quality (as determined by Google's algorithms)
- click-through-rate on search result pages
- author rank (who wrote the article - this factor is new)
- freshness (for certain queries)
- a few hundred other smaller signals

Keep writing quality relevant content and promote it at every opportunity.
